Arrogance is not Confidence or Vice Versa

Arrogant people are very self-conscious VS

Confident people don't care what others think of them

Arrogant people are very insecure VS

Confident people are very aware and accepting of their short comings and weaknesses – no insecurities

Arrogant people generate self-worth by downing others

VS

Confident people gain self-worth from their own accomplishments, skills and abilities

Arrogant people view themselves as superior

VS

Confident people believe in themselves, their abilities and talents – they don't compare themselves to

Arrogant people always know what's better for others and nobody can tell them anything

VS

Confident people are realistic and aware of their potential and abilities – able to accept constructive criticism

Arrogant people ignore, avoid and work hard to cover up their weaknesses

VS

Confident people are constantly examining, evaluating, and improving their weaknesses

Arrogant people never admit their mistakes or apologize

VS

Confident people aren't afraid to recognize their missteps, apologize for them and work to improve themselves

Arrogant people make fun of people and point out blunders of others

VS

Confident people support and help others correct their slip-ups

Arrogant people are cocky and difficult to reason with

VS

Confident people are open minded, and easy going making it easy to communicate with them

Arrogant people always brag about their accomplishments VS

Confident people are humble about their accomplishments (and they accomplish much more!)

Only an arrogant person would say that arrogance is confidence.

Anyone with confidence knows better.
