

What do Nondenominational Churches Believe?

His Hands Church

Introduction

- His Hands Church in Woodstock, Georgia is a casual, nondenominational Christian church. His Hands Church encourages worshippers to wear their jeans, bring their coffee, and build relationships with God and others in their own way.

Nondenominational churches are on the rise in America, where roughly four percent of the population identifies as a non-denominational Christian.

Question: What is a nondenominational church?

Answer: A non-denominational Christian church does not belong to an overarching organization like Methodist, Baptist, or Lutheran churches do. These churches are self-governing, and they decide for themselves how best to teach the word of God.

Nondenominational Churches

- Question: What do nondenominational churches believe?

Answer: Each church has the freedom to choose their own teachings, so no two non-denominational churches are alike. In general, these churches believe in the teachings of the Bible.

Question: What does the Bible say about denominations and church leadership?

Answer: The book of Acts tells of the first missionaries and their efforts to establish some of the first Christian churches. It does not give specific instructions regarding leadership or disagreements.
